

The EU needs the right tools to build the most dynamic, knowledge-based economy by 2010.

By adhering to the Council's Common Position in the upcoming vote on the patentability of computer-implemented inventions (PCII), the European Parliament can help give EU inventors and investors the intellectual property tools they need to build a more competitive Europe - one that can lead through innovation, not stagnate through imitation.

Vote for innovation Support the Common Position

Computing Technology Industry Association

http://www.softwarechoice.org/software_comp/cii_default.aspx